

A WHEELING MAN.

His Success as Captain of the Capital Police in Washington.

PANNELL GARDEN'S PROMOTION

To the Head of the Little Army and the Wonderful Reform He Has Instituted—A Description of His Appearance—Characteristics so Familiar to His Wheeling Friends—How He Was Surprised by the Appointment—He Catches Men Asleep at Their Posts and Takes Prompt Action.

The Washington, D. C., Star of Saturday contains a lengthy article on the Capitol Police, the splendidly organized little army that guards the national capitol building and grounds. Some extracts will prove of especial interest to Wheeling people, particularly to the many friends of Captain A. Pannell Garden, of this city, who, in September last, was, unexpectedly to himself, appointed captain of the force. The Star prints an excellent portrait of Captain Garden, and details his work of reorganization of the police force, commending him for a number of reforms he has instituted. Captain Garden has thirty-six men under him, including three lieutenants. This force is independent, of course, of the regular city police department, and is only used on the capitol grounds and building. The Star says: A great deal has been done during the past few months toward making the little army that guards the capitol as effective as possible, through the determination of the police board to place it on a footing of constant war toward evil doers. This board consists of the architect of the capitol, Mr. Clark, Colonel Bright, the sergeant-at-arms of the senate, and Colonel Snow, the sergeant-at-arms of the house. They elect all the members of the force, and devise regulations for their guidance. On the 11th of last September they met and elected Mr. A. P. Garden captain of the force. They gave the new chief authority to go ahead and put the force in the best possible shape, and he has succeeded in making it a model of discipline and efficiency.

FAMILIAR TO WHEELING PEOPLE. Captain Garden is a stout, good-looking man, with a pleasant face and a brisk, bright manner. He steps quickly and is ever active in his duties. Since he was given his shoulder strap he has endeavored to secure a better discipline among the members of his force, and without being harsh or unreasonably strict he has managed to bring about many little reforms that have tended to make the force more efficient at all points. One of his efforts has been to keep the men on duty in the roundabout sitting about at the four points of the compass and lounging in conversation with each other or with friends who might have dropped in to spend a leisure hour or so. This had become first a habit and finally a custom, and it was hard to persuade the guardians of the great building that they could do more effective work, especially when there was a crowd, by moving about among the people.

But to-day there is a marked change to be noted in the roundabout. The policemen are always in motion, walking here and there and prodding up the loafers who congregate in the great inverted cup, keeping the groups of sight-seers unreasonably in motion and preventing the guides from growing too enthusiastic in their rival efforts to secure custom. Then, too, the effect upon the visitor is much more appropriate. It may be more comfortable for the policeman to sit at his post, but it certainly does not look very business-like. Another of Captain Garden's efforts has been to bring order out of the chaos that existed on the back stands on the east front of the capitol.

HIS EXPERIENCE.

Captain Garden's good work at the capitol is thought to be due to the fact that he has had considerable experience in the line of the preservation of the peace before he came to Washington. He was born and raised in Wheeling, W. Va., where he spent most of his life, up to last August, when he received an appointment as a messenger in the senate under Colonel Bright. Four or five years previous to his coming here he had served as deputy to the sheriff of Ohio county, of which Wheeling is the seat. The service in that part of the country is particularly hard and trying, and it proved an excellent training for the captain, for he is perfectly well acquainted with the diversities and arts of the crook. His appointment as captain was wholly unexpected by him, and he was very much astonished when Colonel Bright told him, one fine morning in September, that he had been promoted.

Captain Garden is aided by three lieutenants. They are of the same grade of rank and pay, and serve on the different watches in command of the squads.

Night duty in the capitol is not pleasant. There is a bareness, a gruesome chill about the marble floors and walls and the vast distances that give a man shivers of nervousness. There are many corners where the light never penetrates, even in the day time, and at night these are particularly "boogish." A way down in the crypt and the vaults beneath that curious place are spots where even the policemen do not care to go without companions. Of course there is nothing there, but a man always feels better when there is some one along to share a darkness that seems to have weight and substance and life.

CAPT. GARDEN AS A DETECTIVE.

One of Capt. Garden's first achievements was productive of a most beneficial reform. It had come to his ears that the men on the night watch were not as vigilant as they might be, and he concluded not to trust to hearsay, but to investigate for himself. So one night he slipped out of his house about 2 o'clock, in his citizen's clothes, and walked over to the capitol, a few blocks away. Going to one of the doors that he knew to be kept unlocked he turned the knob and walked in. The light was dim, and the interior at first was a haze before the half-blinded eyes of the nocturnal visitor. In a moment, however, he had grown accustomed to the light, and his ears tried to trace out a curious sound that came rolling from the depths beyond. It was a low, rumbling, roaring sound, of a subdued, guttural nature. It did not seem to come from any one spot, but to emanate from all the surrounding walls. Soon the captain had secured his bearings, and, softly walking on his tiptoes, he followed the vibrations. A few steps away, behind a column, at the policeman on duty at that post. His head was tilted back, his mouth was open, and from its depths issued the cavernous roar.

The man was asleep at his post. Walking softly away, the captain awoke the sleeper, one by one, and, sharply reprimanding them, ordered them to report in the morning to the police board. The culprits were taken back. They reported in the morning, and the board, after warning them, let them go. Since that time, however, there has been no snoozing at posts.

SUCCESSFUL FINANCIAL INSTITUTION.

The United Banking and Building Company—Its Branch in Wheeling—The Governor of Virginia a Director—Prominent Citizens of Wheeling on the Board Here.

The United Banking and Building Company, of Richmond, Virginia, has through its representative, Mr. M. Jacobson, formed a large branch in Wheeling, and its shares of stock is being daily subscribed to by our citizens. This company invites the closest investigation as to its financial standing, referring freely to the Bradstreet or Dun Mercantile Agencies, the Citizens' Bank of Richmond, Va., Governor O'Ferrall, of Virginia, and to Mr. W. J. W. Cowden, ex-master of Wheeling, who is its attorney for Wheeling; also, Dr. John H. Pipes, one of our leading physicians here, who is its vice president for Wheeling; also, Dr. Z. Phillips and Lewis Jones, both appraisers for the company here.

The following is copied from the Richmond, Va., Dispatch of the 8th instant: "The annual meeting of the stockholders of the United Banking and Building Company was held at its offices in this city at noon yesterday. The president submitted his report as to the business done by the company during the past twelve months. The showing made was most gratifying. In this paper President Blair said that notwithstanding the terrible financial stringency that the country had just passed through, the company was now in better condition than ever before. The paid up stock had increased nearly 100 per cent and local branches had been established in six states. The report of the actuary showed that the average profit yielded by the company since its organization is 19 per cent. The following gentlemen were elected directors: W. J. Johnson, Governor O'Ferrall, William Ryan, H. L. Denoon and Lewis Blair. Governor O'Ferrall takes the place of the late Adolphus Blair on the directory."

The officers of the Banking and Building Company are Lewis H. Blair, president; W. J. Johnson, vice president; W. C. Preston, general attorney; Samuel S. Elam, secretary and treasurer; E. M. Cratchfield, assistant secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Jacobson can be seen at the McClure house.

"Aristocracy" To-night.

At the Opera House this evening Bronson Howard's play will be seen for the first time in Wheeling. The half dozen minor characters introduced in "Aristocracy" in illustration of various types of society here and abroad—the exaggerated Anglo-American, who is more English than the Londoner and more painful; the extraordinary Frenchman, who loves his friends; the frivolous girl of New York society, dazed with the social glimmers of the London world; the empty-headed scion of the oldest Knickerbocker, to whom everything in life is snatched up in family and clothes, etc.—all these people are sketched in the most delightful manner.
